Heres a short teaser: Do you want to be with me, Sabrina? If the answer is yes, then nothing else matters. But he was wrong. Everything else mattered. They didnt live in some fantasyland where folks of all shades could just do as they pleased. Even her fame didnt shield her from the unhappy reality of 1964. The harsh truth of the KKK, segregated schools, police dogs released on protesters. But those hands on her hips, gliding up, then down, gripping her waist, climbing to her breasts, cupping them. Those hands could make her forget for a second. And those kisses, now finding a happy home on the nape of her neck could take her to a different place, a warmer place. A place miles away from the gulf state madness she hoped to escape. Do you want to be with me? he repeated. She answered without words. She let her body do the talking. Her grinding hips against his growing desire answered his plea with a chorus of yeses. She set her backfield in motion, twisting her hips in the wickedest of ways, welcoming him inside. Into the warmth hed been aching for. The pain that had whipped through his body seconds ago was dead now or at least sound asleep. Hed been healed, delivered. Saints be praised.
