

Dialogs with my inner self: Volume I (Volume 1)

It is always difficult trying to explain to others our inner processes. We all as individuals see the world around us in a very different way, depending on our education, personal experiences, the family and country where we grew up and many other factors that make each person a wonderful unique human being. When I started to write my blog as a personal experience, I showed my writings to some of my friends and they all agreed on the idea that I should share them with others, since there were too many people going through the same events and tests I was going through at those moments, but I just didn't think my blogs were good enough to make them public. So I accepted the idea naming my blog Dialogs with my inner self since it was a chat I was having with my subconscious mind about the things I felt I needed to pay more attention to, the aspects I had to change in myself and the notes I wanted to be able to re-read from time to time to work on myself. I opened my blog with the hope that other people who could be going through the same doubts and events in their lives, could find some relief in knowing they were not alone in this journey, I was very surprised with the number of people who were thanking me for sharing my writings. I knew then that we are all going through a massive evolution period and that we as humans all share experiences, doubts, joys, fears and everything else. And if we all lean on each other instead of taking advantage of our peers or beating the others to get self-profit, our evolution would be faster and greater. I do hope that this collection of different writings might give you a different point of view and might motivate you to read more on the different subjects I wrote about in my blogs. My gratitude, to all the people who have been beside me, despite the adversities; and to those who have believed in me, despite the circumstances. May the Universe grant you Light and wisdom in your journey to find yourself once more.
