

DEALING WITH THE RAIN

It all began on the evening of July 1, 1994. Tropical Storm Alberto would bring devastation to South Georgia. The clouds were dark and the rain began to fall softly. The rain would not subside for six days. There was so much water that the damn began to almost rupture from the capacity. The only thing to do was to open the damn gates and allow the water to overflow to the lakes, creeks and rivers. Little did we know, as the water began to overflow, that it would cause the rain to flood the small town of Americus, Georgia. People still went about their daily routines, ignored warnings, and had a tough time dealing with the losses that came with the rain.
