

How Blacks Can Succeed In The Americas, The Caribbean, Africa Or Anywhere Else

How Blacks Can Succeed in the Americas, the Caribbean, Africa or Anywhere Else addresses the psychological, historical, political, cultural and economic factors that have contributed to so many Black children, especially males giving up on the education system. These factors have played a significant role in Blacks becoming active participants in crime and perpetuating their over representation in the criminal justice system. It also explores how these factors perpetuate the high rate of fatherlessness in Black families, high rates of poverty and high rates of unemployment among Black populations in America and throughout the world. It addresses these factors in an informative and inspirational manner speaking not only about the problems that Blacks face, but provides practical solutions. If these solutions are implemented they will help to successfully and drastically reduce the high rate at which Blacks are involved in the criminal justice system, as well as their high rates of poverty and unemployment.
