

At 312 years of age, Shelley Kesinkowsky isn't your ordinary, everyday witch; she prides herself on being a modern, computerized witch...she has internet access. Instead of using ravens, she receives all her correspondence via email, including the weekly pronouncements from the Grand Council of Wizards. She likes the new way. Cleaning raven droppings from your doorstep is just a little disgusting...although, come to think of it, you never have to reboot a raven. When planet Earth faces trouble from the fury of the golem legionnaires of Mother Earth, the Grand Council of Wizards turns to Shelley, whose special golem-creating ability suddenly becomes a high-ticket commodity. The council orders her to create a custom-built golem that will, with the help of Shelley's former nemesis, High Wizard Jason Jeph, mysteriously keep Earth alive. Unknown to the young witch, however, is the lethal card that Jason has tucked up his sleeve, should Shelley's golem fail. At this point, neither Jason's extraordinarily talented but gloriously grumpy hyacinthine macaw, Byching, nor Shelley's special golem, Blue Eyes, will be able to help. Shelley fears she will not be able to create the exactly right spell to transform Blue Eyes into a golem-killing machine. If she fails, Jason may be forced to invoke the deadly words of the Double Pulsar Cantrip. And that could cost both of them their lives.
