Raise your son or daughter to be a millionaire by the age of thirty. This book explains what we as two generations of millionaires did differently than most to help our children become millionaires. You can start at whatever age your child happens to be - even at birth. You will be asked to answer 21 questions. Please write down your answers. In the first appendix the answers will be provided. After finishing the book, match your answers with those in the appendix. You will see how much you have learned since you started reading the book. By reviewing the questions and answers, you will be more likely to apply the learning to raising your children. Your son or daughter does not have to go to college. Many millionaires either did not go to college or did not finish college. After dropping out of college after his second year, my middle son and his wife started a company with a little bit of savings and a whole lot of credit card debt. His net worth was over two million dollars when he turned 30. For most, however, college will help. But many people finish college and do not get a professional job. They take low-paying jobs and often have student loans to pay back. By following the advice in this book, your son or daughter should be able to get a well-paying job right out of college. But getting that job will require understanding how the college placement system works and preparing in advance. Before entering college your son or daughter should know what the best paying jobs are. This book not only tells you, it also provides a way of knowing whether or not your daughter or son is getting offers for the highest paying jobs when (s)he leaves college. You can do something for your son or daughter every day to give them an edge in becoming a millionaire. Both of you can work so they will attain a millionaire status and it will bring the two of you together. Computer mastery is discussed in detail. With a good knowledge of computers, your son or daughter will have no difficulty earning money while in high school and college. Ways of doing this are highlighted. Parents can subtly influence their children over the dinner table and sons and daughters remember. In addition, there are many other opportunities to spend family time preparing your child to become a millionaire. The Success Process is the subject of the last chapter. This starts in getting the first job out of college, but it continues as your son or daughter moves up in their career. The three things an executive recruiter looks for are all within the reach of your son or daughter if they have prepared themselves before college graduation. All three areas of importance and solid examples of people who have become millionaires as a result are presented. You can greatly impact your son or daughter's ability to meet executive recruiter requirements by working with him/her from an early age to hone the three areas that are important to executive recruiters. By following the suggestions in this book and understanding the new knowledge imparted, you can help your son or daughter to achieve millionaire status by the time he or she reaches the age of thirty.
