Excerpt: ... Psalm XXXI. 7. I have hated them that hold os superstitious Vanities: and my Trust hath been in the Lord. IT has been the great and the successful Art of Unbelievers tb misrepresent those Divine Institutions which They would bring into Contempt, and.to mislead Men in the Notion of Duty in order to excuse or justify the Neglett or Violation of it. True Religion, the Christian Religion in particular, is too amiable to be opposed, whilst it appears in its native Colours: Whilst it inculcates Devotion to the supreme Being to whom We owe all the Blessings We enjoy, and all the noblest Hopes We can entertain, whilst it teaches Justice and Charity to those who are placed with us in this uncertain State, whilst it prescribes the Regulation of our PaJJiom within those Bounds, which may make them useful to the World and to Ourselves, It carries in a very great Measure its own Evidence with it, and ex A 2 poses poses them as Enemies to Mankind, who are labouring to subvert the Belief or Practice of it. Nor are They insensible of this Charge, nor unmindful to obviate it, by giving a very different Account of the Nature and Effects of that Holy Institution into which We have been baptized. They have taken Advantage of the Additions, Alterations, Perversions, and Abuses, which Men of weak or wicked Minds have introduced into this Religion, by them to describe die Religion itself; and thus having formed their Notion of it, or pretended at least to do so, from those very Follies and Vices which it was intended to extirpate, They have then combated this Creature of their own Imagination, have openly avowed and even triumphed in their Undertaking, and claimed some Merit in attempting to rescue their Fellow-Creatures from that, which They would represent as so severe and i...
