

Traditional Roots: Towards an appropriate relationship between the Church of Ireland and

The scenes at Drumcree Parish Church in Portadown over the last number of years have brought to the fore the question of the relationship between the Orange Order and the Church of Ireland. The question itself, not to mention any answer to it, is divisive within the church, many whose members are also members of the Orange Order and see no difficulty in the present situation. Others, of course, have a very different point of view. This book, the result of extensive research and reflection and Earl Storey's personal experiences living and working in the North, sets out the background to the debate: the essence of the Church of Ireland, the Order, and the Church today. Earl Storey is Rector of Glenay Parish. Co. Antrim, Northern Ireland. Earl Storey's book, drawing on his own Northern background and experiences is particularly valuable.--Church Review.
