

Are you bogged down by a long list of goals and to-do lists? Does your to-do list get longer and messier every single day? Do you blame yourself for being lazy, unproductive and procrastinating? Have you been called a good-for-nothing lazy bum who can't get anything done? Are you worried that not fulfilling your obligations as a _____ will make you seem irresponsible to the people around you? If any of these sound familiar, perhaps it's time to try a different way. Since his teenage years, Frank Young could never wrap his head around how he was supposed to make those endless to-do lists or goals work in his life. Each time he tried these methods, he ended up feeling more discouraged that he still had not achieved his goals yet. Instead of energizing and motivating him, his goals list drained him. He felt like a failure. Finally one day, he decided enough is enough. Driven by years of repressed anger, he decided to FUCK all those goals and lists he was supposed to be making, and give up any pre-conceived notions of what he should be doing to please his bosses, parents, teachers or co-workers. From that day on, he applied a radically different approach into his life. One that was not based on any obligations, duties, or lists. And as they say, the rest is history.
