

Routine genealogical research stumbled upon a curious mystery. An unrelated family narrative speaks of a strange unidentified crash that occurred in the southeast Missouri countryside at a time and place consistent with personal ancestral history. The search for answers weaves through obscure and shadowy paths littered with lost records. Synchronicity lurks around each twist and turn. While proof is elusive, the family historians require no additional evidence above the reliable nature of the perplexed family witness. Honest and bewildered citizens confided in family members about an incident so unusual that the only description available at the time was “otherworldly.” “The Report on Unidentified Flying Objects” by Edward J. Ruppelt, head of the United States Air Force Project Blue Book from 1951 to 1953, questions what constitutes proof: does a UFO need to land at the entrance to the Pentagon? Ruppelt further attests to the difficulty of writing about a spectacle that does not officially exist. The 1953 CIA-sanctioned Robertson Panel recommendation to debunk unidentified flying objects continues to create an atmosphere of obfuscation that engulfs the enigma. Until public policy about aerial phenomena evolves into twenty-first-century reality, the truth will remain elusive. Did a misinterpretation of an event by honest citizens develop into a southeast Missouri urban legend, or did a veil of secrecy and intimidation endow the region with a hidden history?
